WHEN DOBBY MARCHES THE WORLD WATCHES

REGAL. IMPERIOUS. COMMANDING.

Marching may be a common behaviour among caiques, but none do with as much gusto & flare as Dobby.

We caught up with Dobby the Caique this week to talk about his fabulous march, his wife & the life of global fame.

Dobby sighs with false humility, stating that it's a bit of a burden being hatched with such a gift as the best march in the world. He quietly scrolls through his list of fellow feathered followers on social media, wishing that they didn't harbour quite so much jealousy towards him. "It's just that all caiques march, you know? Just because mine is the best, that doesn't mean that I should be revered," Dobby states with empathy in his voice, but a clear look of mischief in his eyes.

I asked Dobby what inspires his famous walk. His answer was more complex than expected. First and foremost, marching is about establishing control and dominance. He who marches best is the boss. Why be so commonplace as to gain dominance with biting like other birds? Of course, biting is on the table as it should be in any bird's repertoire... but it's boring. Passée. Why can't dominance also be awe-inspiring and entertaining?

Marching is also used to impress. The Bee Gees knew how important a walk was to catch the ladies eyes and it seems that caiques are the only species of birds to take that information to heart. When Dobby marches with strong strides, high legs stomping to a perfect rhythm, there isn't a lady around with her tail down. Marching is also invaluable for impressing the hoomans. Which leads us to the third purpose of marching: attention.

“Marching isn't just something I do,
it's a lifestyle”

Dobby already knows that he's the most important bird in the world, but one can never have enough attention. If his wife, Lala, is busy playing with a toy instead of admiring his greatness, Dobby just has to march a few steps in front of her. Lala will once again be at his beak & call.

“The best march needs
high leg raises, a strong stomp, perfect timing
and stamina.

It was natural for me, but
will take other birds years
of practice.”

- Dobby

As much as Dobby wants his wife to adore him, he admits that attention from the hoomans is more important. Hoomans are the food and toy source, after all. Plus, hoomans are simpler minded than parrots, so entertain them is a breeze. Just five stomps across their field of vision demands complete focus, laughter, praise and treats.

It's not only about control and manipulation, Dobby considers it his calling to use his gift to entertain the hooman peasants & servants of the world. He hopes that his greatness will inspire other caiques to be almost as talented as he is... someday.

LALA PREENING DOBBIE, AS IS THE NORM IN THIER HOME.

once upon a time

Lala was two years old when Dobby was hatched. He didn't mind, older chicks were sexy. Lala would be a teenybopper, just one more year away from full adult lady. That means that Dobby would have a mature girl to take care of him while he was still a silly baby. Dobby knew from hatch that he was the center of the universe,

What started as an arranged marriage between two caiques has turned into a fairy-tale for birds. Dobby speaks out about his wife, Lala so having an older fiancée to cater to him is exactly what he would have wanted. Points to the hoomans for making that happen. Dobby thinks that Lala is the perfect wife. She preens him daily without asking for preens in return. She doesn't get mad when he steals the hoomans attention from her. Lala always eats with him, allowing him to take the best bits and she calls him to bed with her every night. Lala is Dobby's light.

What is On YOUR LIPS ends up in them

Lip Balm

One thing I can't live without is lip balm. Despite being well hydrated, I must use my lip balm at least 6 times a day.

Then I think about how many times in a day I lick my lips – especially when eating – and I'm eating a heck of a lot of that lip balm. This daily occurrence is so common that medical researchers have studied how much lip products a person eats per year!

More importantly, I think about how many times a day I kiss my birds... It's a LOT.

Food Grade Ingredients

I doubt that 50 times / day would be an exaggeration. So if I always have lip balm on my lips, it's ending up on their beak & feathers. Which means that my parrots are also eating my lip balm.

That's why ingredients are so important. That's why ingredients are so important. Make sure that you're using a lip balm made from organic food grade ingredients. Parrot- safe lip balm needs to be free from cocoa butter, avocado oil, apricot kernel oil, castor oil, cherry oil & more.

The best example is FeatherWhipped Lip Balm – specifically made for parrot owners.

4 JUICY QUESTIONS FOR...

3

Do you have
an enemy?

Yes, the vacuum.
It's evil. It must
die. I attack it
every time it
comes around,
but I have yet
to slay it.

4

Are you
ever jealous
of your wife?

I suppose most people would think that a
good husband
shouldn't be...
But, yes, I am.
Lala is a great
chick who
deserves cuddles
and scratches,
but not more
than I deserve
attention.
I admit that I
demand that Lala preen me
any time she is getting cuddles
from the hoomans.
I am who I am.

2

How do
you like to celebrate?

Jumping is the best way to celebrate all
achievements
in life. Getting away with
being bad,
getting the
attention
I wanted,
getting a
treat.
jumping
is good
for everything.

1

What is the best
way to get
attention?

Marching,
of course.
I have also mastered the
method of flying
to hoomans
without warning, & chewing on
their clothes so
that they are forced to pick
me up.
Really, I am so
amazing that my
mere existence
gets everyone's
attention.
